

Senators vote for discriminatory gifts

by Evelyn Schusheim

Senate yesterday voted to continue administering discriminatory scholarships providing that the discrimination is not offensive.

The main subject of discussion was the Annette S. Hill Bursary which has a clause limiting the funds to "young men of the Protestant faith and of good character from the Maritimes or Ontario." The bursary has an annual return of $50,000 of which only $24,000 has been allotted this year.

Dr. William Bruce, Professor of Mechanical Engineering and Chairman of the University Scholarships Committee justified the use of the bursary because it granted $17,500 to black students from the Maritimes.

"This is a unique situation involving a large sum of money. There are funds available to spread money to others in the community," Mr Bruce stated.

Leading the attack against the acceptance of the bursary was Academic Vice-Principal Michael Oliver. "This bursary is offensive discrimination. By accepting it McGill is implicated in this discrimination," Oliver stated. "We have to decide if we will be a party to this or not."

Psychology professor Dalbir Bindra claimed that he was in favor of discrimination if it furthered the cause of education. "Any way that education can be advanced should be taken," Bindra added.

Dean Howard I. Ross of the Faculty of Management asserted that the bursary cannot be refused because most benefactors give bursaries or scholarships not out of their attachment to the school but out of their interest in certain groups. "By passing motions to turn down these scholarships we discourage people from donating to McGill."

Perry Meyer, Professor of Law claimed that there was a moral issue involved. "This type of gift is not meant to help needy students but rather to exclude certain other people from benefitting from the gift." Where a group is obviously one that practices discrimination we shouldn't accept the gift," he advised.

The motion to continue to administer the bursary was passed by a 25-7 vote.

Other motions on the Scholarships Committee report, to try to change discriminatory gifts were also passed.

S C rejects election but accepts winners

Students' Council last night invalidated the October 21st Senate elections but at the same time ratified the seven elected senators. In so doing they bypassed the Judicial Committee by accepting its invalidation of the elections but refusing to call new ones.

Council passed a motion, presented by Kevin O'Connell, which stated that while Council ratified the Judicial Committee's overruling of the election on a technicality, it felt that the choice of the students should be respected, and therefore the seven elected councillors would be appointed by council to serve.

Students' Society President Hutton Archer explained the legality of the move and advised Council. "I recommend that we accept that Judicial Committee's decision as a valid one, but that we bear in mind that it is Council's prerogative to choose our senators by precedent from the Hajaly term".

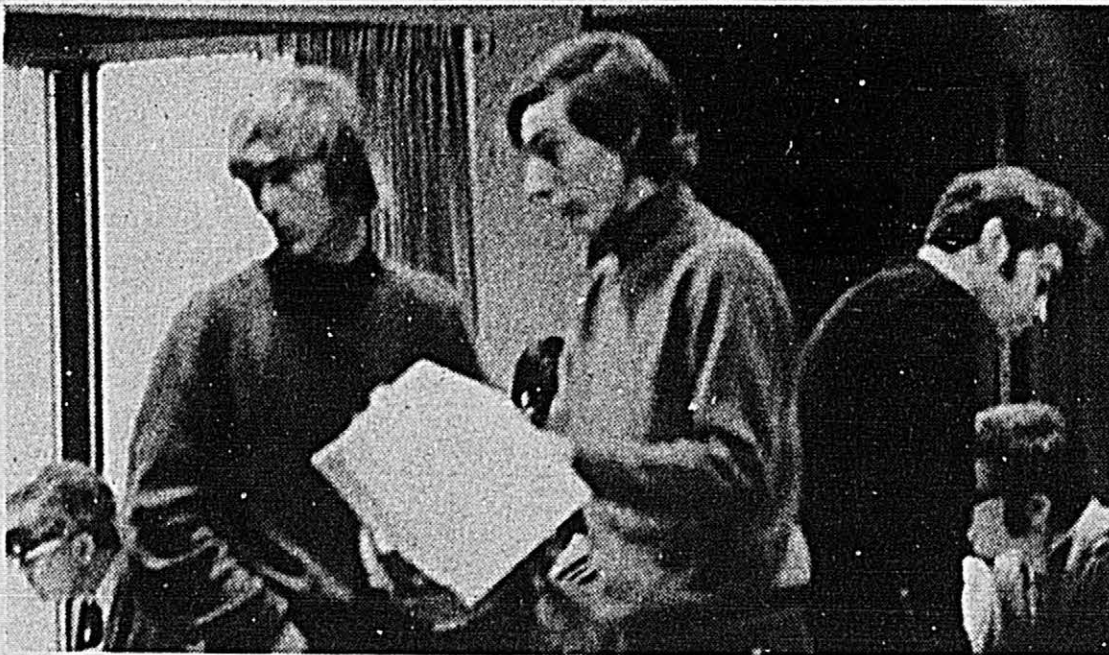

Joseph Hackett, one of the seven elected senators and a Council member, spoke in defence of the motion. He felt that

by Ze'ev Ionis

Council has always had free choice as to how it would elect its representatives to Senate.

He also said in defence of Council's acceptance of the senators that "seven percent of the student body came out to vote. The 93% that didn't vote gave their vote up to the seven percent, and their opinion should be respected."

The opposition against this motion was led by Robert Turner, Medical representative, who felt that as only seven percent voted, the elected senators were not representative of the student body.

R & W back

Winter Carnival may be dead... but McGill's Red and White Revue isn't.

Auditions for the annual student-produced musical will be held today from 8 pm and on Saturday from 11 am onwards, in room B26 of the Students' Centre.

According to R&W producer David Hochoy, some 20 positions are up for grabs, eight of them being leads in the musical comedy, which will be based on the 1920's.

Written by McGill students Brian Bessner and Alan Guttman, the Revue will run from Feb. 16 to 20, and will include some 17 musical numbers.

Hochoy pointed out that, in the past, the Revue has been accused of being an in-clique of certain McGill students and semi-professional outsiders.

"This is what we're trying to get away from," Hochoy said. "The Red and White is a student thing, born and bred here, and we want people here to get involved. Even if everybody can't be in the cast, we need a huge production staff."

The Revue producer said that anyone interested in working on the production side of the show either speak to him during the auditions, or leave a note in the

Media resist censorship

QUEBEC (CUP) — Despite numerous threats and words of caution from the Quebec Justice Minister Jerome Choquette, the Quebec media have decided to determine for themselves what is news-worthy.

CKLM, the French-language radio station which has been used by the Liberation Cell of the FLQ to communicate with government officials, and the Montreal Gazette, have both stated that they will use the information they receive from or about the FLQ according to its news value.

News director of CKLM Pierre Pasceau said Tuesday (Nov. 10) that for the past month or more they have been trying to get along with the police and the justice minister, Pasceau declared. "I've had it ... from now on we decide whether to use FLQ material on the basis of its news value."

Pasceau decided he "had it" after he received an authentic communiqué and handed it over to police chief Maurice St. Pierre who said the police would give him a copy of it, but did not bother to do so.

"I felt it was an important communiqué... it was a lot like the original manifesto," Pasceau complained. "The next time I'm going to copy it first and to hell with them. They can have it after we've got a copy."

Pasceau alleged there have been general warnings to the station by the minister to "be careful". It's not direct censorship, it's much worse than that, it's indirect," he said.

A Montreal Gazette senior editor agreed with Pasceau. He asserted they will make future decisions on using kidnapping and FLQ news on the basis of news value.

Last week the Gazette was threatened with prosecution by Choquette because it had released the fact that the police were in possession of a new Liberation Cell manifesto and a picture of James Cross.

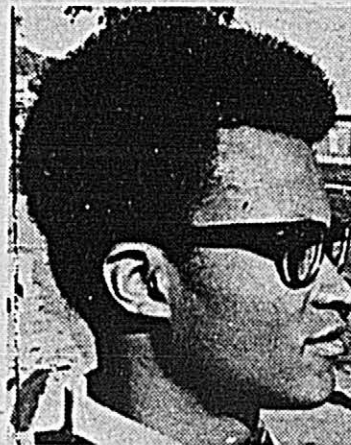

Another Gazette editor said that at least one other story had been killed by the "indirect censorship" of the Quebec authorities. He claimed it was a direct result of government pressure.

The story criticized police work in the kidnapping case: however the story was not used after a Choquette aide met with a senior editor to discuss handling of kidnapping news.

Choquette, who has been stating a "hands-off" policy to the media for some time now, held an "off-the-record" meeting with about 40 news editor on Nov. 2. He said he expected the media not to interfere with police work in the kidnapping by publishing or airing news irresponsibly.

Choquette asked the newsmen not to publish anything received from the FLQ. He also warned them to conform carefully to the War Measures Act in their coverage of the crisis.

Federal justice minister John Turner, however, still maintains that nothing is preventing the Quebec newspapers from printing statements from the FLQ.

Hutton Archer

Archer noted that the Judicial Committee found that the election was properly advertised, and that they had therefore refused to overthrow the election on those grounds.

In other business, Council passed a motion that all future senators are to take office August 1 and that they are to serve until July 31 of the following year.

Council also appointed Dave Sprague and Sajid Maqsood as co-Chief Returning Officers to start work immediately on the elections to be held December 2 for Council positions.

Ancient Greek now mod

by Steve Lyons

Two McGill professors have developed an audio-lingual course in Ancient Greek which will be offered to 35,000 French-speaking high school students in Quebec within the next three years.

Albert Schacter

The course, which was formulated by professors Albert

Schacter and Douglas Ellis of the Classics department, is financed by Ford Foundation grants.

It first got off the ground in 1964, and two years later the course material was compiled in a collection entitled "Ancient Greek: A Structural Programme."

Although the course is audio-lingual, professor Schacter does not intend it to make instructors obsolete. "The course is not self-teaching" he commented, "but self-correcting. In other words, the students need a teacher to explain the course and to see that they understand it."

The course is intended for beginners, but it is accelerated and entails extensive study: four hours of class reading and composition, and four hours of laboratory work. The main purpose of the course is to teach students to read Greek.

Courses in ancient Greek now offered at most high schools are taught in the same manner as Latin. They concentrate on written, as opposed to spoken, Greek. However ancient Greek is a 'sing-song' language much the same as Chinese.

Regular attendance at all language laboratory sessions is vital.

Time for an army union?

OTTAWA (CUP) — Plans are being set in motion to unionize the Canadian Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The government is maintaining silence on the move, which is being made by the Public Service Alliance of Canada (PSA).

In response to a question from NDP member of parliament Andrew Brewin, Defense Minister D.S. Macdonald replied that he was unaware of the PSA plans, despite the fact the union notified the government of them over two months ago.

Both Brewin, who is supporting the unionization move, and PSA spokesman K. R. Robinson stressed they aren't advocating the right of soldiers to strike.

"You couldn't have a bunch of guys taking a vote on whether they were going to attack the enemy or something like that," said Robinson.

Asked why not, he replied, "It becomes a matter of national security. I'm all for democracy in the work place. But you couldn't do this if a bunch of guys got together and decided not to attack that hill because they might get killed. That's absurd. You know, the Americans are wrestling with this problem in Vietnam."

The PSA is asking the government to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which lists those government employees who can be unionized. They want both the armed forces and the RCMP added to the list.

Robinson thinks binding arbitration should be used in place of a strike should there be a disagreement which bargaining talks cannot resolve. Brewin, who sees the union as a vehicle to get better pay and grievance procedures for soldiers, thinks that public airing of the issues would force the government to a fair settlement.

Robinson refuses to say whether the PSA will attempt to unionize the armed forces if the government refuses to go along and amend the law. "We have a lot of other priorities," he says, implying they will only organize the working soldiers if the government says it is all right.

Although the government is not talking about the proposal, several high ranking military officers have denounced the ideal. Both Brewin and Robinson respond to such criticism by pointing out that the armies of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and West Germany are unionized.

One unresolved question is the size of the Armed Forces Union and whether there would be separate unions for different services and for enlisted men. Robinson doesn't think the question of whether the officers and men are in the same union is very important. He points out that in Norway there are separate unions in the air force, while all army men are in the same union.

Robinson says the PSA has a "large file of requests" from soldiers which poured in since PSA president Claude Edwards noted the inequality between pay in the armed forces and in civilian jobs in the Canadian government.

If the government does allow the PSA to attempt to unionize the armed forces, Robinson estimates it would take a year to get an organization going. "We'd have a hell of an organization job on our hands," he says.

"What we're looking for in this year's production is enthusiasm. And that's what we're out to offer the campus and Montreal: enthusiasm, joy, the magic of the musical."

"We're not out to preach at people. We want to give them something bright and refreshing, something to escape into for a couple of hours... and to come out feeling refreshed and more together." Hochov said.

Discipline comm. chairman resigns

by Ze'ev Ionis

The Committee on Rights and Responsibilities is still sitting, though there have been major changes in its membership.

The chairman of the committee, Dr. Leon St. Pierre, professor of chemistry, has resigned. When asked to comment on the reasons for his resignation, Dr. St. Pierre said "I'm a hell of a busy guy."

He continued, "I don't like to participate in things which don't bear on my teaching functions. The principal asked me to serve, and I did for one year, but I did it as my duty, and not because I wanted to."

Another member who quit the committee is former Dean of Dentistry James McCutcheon, who left McGill this summer.

Although the senate has filled the two vacancies with professors Stanley Shapiro of the Faculty of Management and Colin Stearn of the Department of Geological Sciences, it will be up to the committee to choose a new chairman.

Asked whom he would choose, Dr. St. Pierre remarked "there are several people who I feel are of the right attitude". It would have to be someone who doesn't overwhelm the student, and who would be willing to listen to other viewpoints", he clarified.

Two people who he feels fit this requirement are Dr. Muriel Stern, of Psychology and Dr. John Durnford, Dean of Law.

Hutton Archer, President of the Students' Society, and a member of the committee, commented "I don't have much optimism with regard to this committee, so the choice doesn't much matter one way or the other."

Economics:

Acad. decisions only

by Linda Wall

The Economics department has received assurance from Dean Edward Stnsbury of Arts and Science, that decisions on staff promotions and tenure for the following year will be made on academic grounds alone.

Professor Graham Smith, Chairman of Economics, made the announcement at a department meeting yesterday. He said that no cuts will be made in the department on budgetary grounds.

Several staff members expressed doubt that the higher university administration would support Dean Stnsbury's commitment. Professor Smith assured them, however, that the dean had "acted in good faith."

A Committee on Promotions, Contract Renewal and Tenure will be formed to make decisions on next year's staff. All full professors of economics as well as Chairman Smith will probably serve on this committee.

The body will review contracts of Department of Economics members, basing its judgments solely on academic competence. "If a staff member is considered academically meritorious, he will stay on in the department," said Smith.

After much discussion, the meeting passed a resolution clarifying the nature of the committee. It also passed a sub-amendment proposed by Professor Tom Asimakopulos, stating that the committee will choose staff on academic grounds alone.

In addition, the committee will participate in budget cutting only to the extent that such cuts are influenced by academic considerations.

If the present number of staff members is reduced, the money thus saved will probably mean a decrease in the department's budgetary cutbacks.
